When Maya came to Jubilee, she was working two part-time jobs and still sleeping in her car. She was tired in a way that rest alone couldn't fix. What she needed was a chance to stop surviving and start rebuilding.

At Jubilee, she found more than a roof. She found a room of her own, a community that cared, and a compassionate case manager who helped her steady her next steps. Bit by bit, she began to breathe again. She enrolled in financial coaching, learned to budget around her goals, and started saving for her own apartment.

The woman who once whispered about what might be possible now speaks with certainty about what's next. Maya is preparing for permanent housing, paying down debt, and planning a future that feels steady beneath her feet.

Your support builds the foundation for women like Maya to rise with dignity, stability, and hope.
